Velma to go public

It has been confirmed that leading UK games company, Velma Inc., is set to have its IPO in the new year. "VI", as it is fondly referred to by its fans (according to the press-release I have cut and pasted), has achieved immense success from its mindnumbingly tedious and complex administrative games, including last year's break-out star "Claiming a refund from Great Western Trains" and this year's smash-hit "Why does Zoom keep dropping the connection?"

CEO of Velma, Charles Bellman, said: "The lawyers and the brokers have been beavering away for months and we are delighted that things are in a sufficiently fit state for us to float next year and inject much-needed investment into Velma Inc. On a personal note I am even more delighted to be receiving £27,121,871 for my share options!"

Some gamers have, however, had a less enthusiastic response to the news. Andy Baker, who runs the hugely popular "Vexed by Velma" YouTube channel commented: "Personally I feel threatened by this share offering. The pressure on Velma to increase profits could lead to the cutting of costs and as a consequence their games could become significantly less misery-inducing".

Drama at the Computering Awards

The great and the good of the UK games industry were out in force last month for the 37th Annual Computering Awards, despite the cold wintery weather. Many industry commentators had been predicting a clean sweep for DaphneHQ for their ground-breaking game "Oh god why am I writing this so close to the deadline?" however it was pipped at the post for the all-important Game of the Year award by rival Velma Inc.'s "Spectre (our lawyers tell us that we have to state in the title of the game that it has nothing to do with James Bond)".

This news didn't go down well with DaphneHQ's CEO (who is famous for pretentiously changing his name to something utterly unpronounceable) and at about halfpast nine, having indulged heavily in wine and cigars, he got into a furious argument with Velma CEO Charles Bellman. The two agreed to "take it outside" but by this point both were so insensible that they collapsed into the mud without exchanging blows and had to be helped back inside by their flunkies.

Fundraiser

Last month the staff of DaphneHQ declared themselves an independent country and insisted that any drivers who want to pass through their site had to buy a passport! Don't worry, they haven't gone mad as hatters, it was all a stunt to raise money for charity! Mud bespattered and drenched garments were more the rule than the exception, but at the end of the day they were able to make a donation of more than £3,000 to the Society for Distressed and Aged Puzzle-Setters. Well done gang!

TV Review - Bandersnatch

The latest offering from Barley Choker takes the concept of traditional television and turns it on its head. The viewer, rather than simply sitting down and watching the show, is forced to choose option after option to progress the plot. The notion that people would find it entertaining to sit in front of a screen and choose the direction of a narrative is simply nonsensical! You heard it here first - this will never catch on!

ESOTERIC PROGRAMMING

We are always interested in esoteric programming languages - those that have been made for fun, as a joke, or to prove a point. This month's language is PABLO - a clever but indecipherable language used to demonstrate advanced encryption techniques. We are feeling it may be difficult to understand! We're not even sure quite what this program does. Or even if it's a full program?! VHELV*UOKLR RB?S8BBB01% L-FQ9HNNSOR 8N^N#QVW=K! 8Y6P+6$100" ="7@%4?.101 Q U!$W{"J*6 CCCCCCCCCCCC

AI ART

There are many uses of Artificial Intelligence today, but could AI make art in the future? It's a topic that technologists and futurists have been furiously debating.

Some say it may never be possible, but others believe that computers may be able to generate images based on simple human commands in a matter of seconds. Sounds like science fiction!

Our resident artist has mocked up what she believes AI art could look like, guessing that it may resemble a painting or even a photograph. But the computer would probably also add random numbers into the image, as that's the kind of thing computers do.

In future, this technology could be used to assist human artists, help talentless game designers, or even win art prizes!

DECODER

Following on from last month's program to encode secret messages to a series of numbers, this month we present the program that decodes them!

Simply enter a number you generated with the encoder program, and it will print the corresponding word. Several numbers combine to make a full message, just press ENTER after entering each number.

If you share this program with a friend, you can send secret messages to each other!

The program could be improved in future to include all words in the dictionary - we have included a large selection of the most commonly used words.

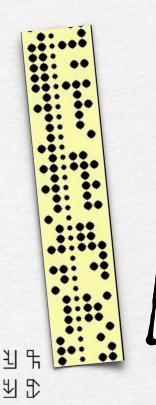

We are sure that this kind of technology will be used by top international spies in the near future.

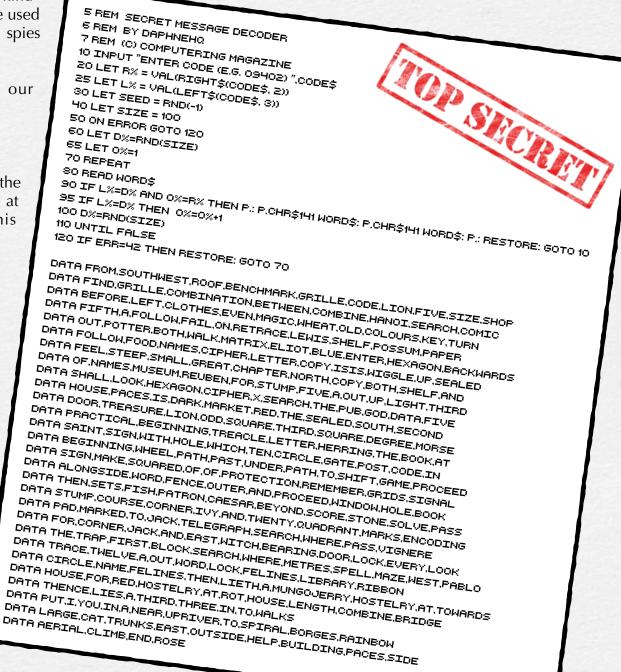

Can you decode our message to you?

This game has been doing the rounds in the office recently, and we all agree it is one of the best out there at the moment. However, finding all the secret hidden cats is one of the hardest and most tedious parts of the game, so we present a handy diagram of their locations, to make it a bit easier for you! We find that starting at the bottom and working your way up works best. Good luck!

BATTLESHIP Down!

3/10 Really Good Software Ltd.

This modern take on the classic game of Battleships is out now for the BBC Micro and Electron. Players take it in turns to fire a missile at a grid square to try and destroy their opponent's armada of war ships. You can play with two players or one player vs the computer.

The gameplay is disappointing, with some battleships appearing in lakes (or islands?!) and when playing against the computer, it seems to guess correctly suspiciously often. Overall not something I would play for very long, but you may get something out of it.

The team in the office managed to beat the game eventually, by each choosing a section of the map to try and attack - Louis started with O15:T20, Thomas used C15:H20, Bernard tried O3:T8, and Tokuhiro C3:H8 - it was difficult, and there was hissing as well as cheering when they finished it!

We have kindly printed the winning moves for those wanting to cheat! Try D11, K3, I9, D12, D16, I4, M3, J3, M8, C3, S7, L2, E9, G6, M8, M5, O9, M2, O3, M6, I1, F3, M2, K6, H5, F7, J20.

ACTUAL REALITY GAMES

There is a growing trend of "actual reality" gaming, with more and more people sick of staring at screens for hours on end. One company capitalising on this is interminable games developer DaphneHQ, who have recently released this puzzle game for several platforms including Wood and Bakelite.

The object of the game is to move the large square block to the top right corner, by sliding the other blocks around, in 27 steps. Sounds fun!

Some people predict that in the future we may all be connected to an "actualverse" where we can work, play, and live our lives. But the high cost of developing this means it may never happen. Review by Arnold Eidus

DR.BORIS

1/10 DaphneHQ

Your name is Doctor Boris. You just graduated from medical school and have gone to work in a new hospital somewhere near the Cotswolds. But the building work isn't complete and due to cutbacks in the NHS you have to go out there and do the work yourself!

This is a typically infuriating game from DaphneHQ. There are complicated dead ends, confusing information that may or may not be puzzles, it's hard to know when you've finished, and it is littered with opaque medical terms.

It seems DaphneHQ have all but admitted this by inclusion of a series of cheat codes on the back of the cassette case (276305003, 257695007, 21481007, 11713004) but even then it's not obvious how to use them.

CATASTROPHE!

5/10 DaphneHQ

From the team that brought you Squirrel Frenzy!, DaphneHQ are back with their latest adventure game. It involves exploring endless identical corridors, picking up vaguely useful items, and talking to characters that mostly remain silent.

The game is easily one of the most talked-about releases of the year. The vast media campaign, including social media engagement from none other than Dame Maggie Philbin, has created huge expectations. These expectations have, however, not been met by a long measure. It would probably be impossible for any game to live up to the hype surrounding CATastrophe, but even putting the hype to one side, the harsh reality is that this is a very poor game indeed.

The premise is that you are playing some kind of character wandering around some kind of place, attempting to solve various puzzles, whilst someone (or something) talks at you. The puzzles aren't clever, just irritating. Who cares which continent the cats came from? Do they expect the names of random herbs to just pop into my head? There are characters, objects, and locations that appear to have been put in there simply to create some thematic colour - well this player can tell you that certainly didn't work!

Gamers were hoping for more of the breath-taking gameplay and harrowing social realism of DaphneHQ's last smash hit Squirrel Frenzy! What they got instead is an embarrassing failure of a game, which was riddled with bugs on release. Three changes would have fixed this problem - get rid of that awful droning voice, get rid of the sodding puzzles, and put some bloody squirrels in it! Words like this are hard for me to write - I have been a fan of DaphneHQ for decades - but I can only give you my honest opinion. This is a cabbage of a game, and a bad one at that. However, we did enjoy some of the excellent sound effects, which unfortunately due to a manufacturing error were excluded from most copies of the game.

Thanks for sending in your delightful cat pictures! We're still not sure why though, as this is a computer magazine...
